THIS HOTEL IS 'HIGH TECH': ENJOY YOUR STAY (IF YOU CAN)

Text: DAVID G. ORTIZ / HOJADEROUTER

Check-in handles a computer, a robot acts as buttons and carries your bags, the door to the room opens without putting any key and every detail of the room is controlled from a tablet. So will the future hotels, halfway between science fiction Utopian and torment of a futuristic dystopia.

— Hotels and technology a succored combination that can be the starting point of a dream, a nightmare or both at the same time. You're not going to lie, traveling friend: control every detail of the room with your mobile phone, the TV jacuzzi going through that fridge full of Benjamins you're afraid to touch, is attractive; but also opens a Pandora's box in computer security is not exactly easy to close.

Let's start this route by housing techie visiting dream hotels that already use technology thousand and one ways to bring the room to another level. We traveled first to San Francisco, and spent the night of our lives geek in the Zetta hotel, including the British version of Traveler in its compilation of the best hotels in 2014.

The walls of each room seem to scream "technology" with that vintage portrait of a woman based floppies 3½ (the mythical floppy disk). The old Atari console and a turntable topped this return to the past in the twelfth century. Technology Obsess G-Link, present in other hotels looking to the future, does the contrast: thanks to it, the customer can send videos and music from your smartphone or tablet to a TV (attention) 46 inches.
